Abstract:

The problem of lack of geographical space combining by the increasing number of population has led Singaporean government to precede a national policy on reclamation. However such a policy has detrimental impacts on the Indonesian-Singaporean bilateral relations that may generate potential conflict in create a potential delimitations conflict in the Indonesia-Singapore borderline since the reclamations will detain Indonesian sovereignty. The government should take more serious concern with the potency of the conflict by increasing the awareness of the security along the Indonesian borderline.
